Handbook & Menu

/* Rules of The Internet */

1

The Internet is not the internet

“The Internet” is where you are now.

It’s a physical location,

and it works like an online forum.

Don’t confuse this with “the internet,”

which is the thing on your laptop or phone.

2

The Internet exists to help
you meet new people

When the internet (the technology) first came out,

it promised to connect people.

Now, people are less connected than ever.

The Internet (the place) is here to fix that.

3

The best thing to do at The Internet is to post

When you post, it makes The Internet better for everyone.

To “post” is to write something on the TV above your table,

and then talk to anyone who comes by

to talk to you about what you wrote.

You can post by scanning the QR code at your table,

and typing something in the little box that appears.

If you don’t know what that means, ask a server and we’ll help.

4

The second best thing to do
at The Internet
is to browse

You can also make The Internet better

by walking around,

reading other people's posts,

and then talking to the people who posted

any stuff you think is interesting.

This is also a great way to meet new people,

by the way.

The worst thing to do
at The Internet
is to sit alone
on your laptop or phone
without posting anything
or talking to anybody

Ok look, we're not mad. This is allowed too.

But if you do this, we might bother you
with ads from time to time,
or try to sell you spam.

Same as the regular internet.

That's just how internets work.

The best way to post is to be yourself

Yes we know that sounds scary.
Don't be afraid.

It makes The Internet a much better place when you're you.

If you post something lazy like
"I don't know what to post," that's ok,
but it's not making The Internet better
for everyone.

But if you post something honest and human
and vulnerable and real,

or maybe something goofy and weird
and silly and fun,

then you're definitely making
The Internet better for everyone.

Can't decide what to post? Ask us!
We're always here to help.

We also have
food and drinks

Please buy some.

If you buy stuff,
it means we get to keep existing.

See next page for the menu.

¹Spam. (noun). A staple of The Internet, consisting of suspicious products and services, incompletely described, which continue to be offered despite it being highly unclear whether anyone is actually buying them. Spam has been known to lead to surprising results when ordered. Items in this section may include food, drinks, branded merchandise, shirts, hats, backpacks, high tech electronics, premium subscriptions, invitations to exclusive events, job offers, business partnerships, or a complete change to the buyer's overall path in life. The Internet makes no guarantee as to the contents of the spam. Some items on this menu may contain actual spam. Order at your own risk.
